The history of the town continues with the Roman colonization who were attracted by the mining wealth of Mazarrón and the closeness to the great Carthago Nova, and who left remains like the Roman archeological ensemble in el Alamillo. It was in the late roman period when the town became the center of the production of the fish sauses, being the most known sauce "Garum", whose recipe can be found in the Roman fish salting factory in Puerto de Mazarrón. This is a museum which preserves part of the structures of what was one of the greatest industrial complex of the era allocated to the salting and fish sauses production.
